

International conflicts in a mediated world: News-making about the conflict between China and Tibet

Essay from the year 2008 in the subject Communications - Media and Politics, Politic Communications, grade: 1,0, Stockholm University, language: English, abstract: 1 IntroductionThe process of Globalization and new communication technologies such as television and internet provide advanced opportunities for the mass media to report about conflict and war in any remote part of the world beyond national borders. The public opinion and peoples perception of a conflict can be shaped by news coverage, in many cases imprinted by the relationship between the media and the political elite which is especially consistent in times of war (Hallin 1986, cited in Dimitrova and Stromback 2005: 406). If media coverage is reflecting the line of government officials, images related to war and conflict are biased. This construction of reality by the contemporary mass media is especially criticised, besides other critique, by so-called corrective forms of journalism (Cottle 2006: 100-119).The recently escalated conflict between the Peoples Republic of China and its autonomous region of Tibet is perceptible everywhere in the world and not only a national issue behind doors any more as contemporary mass media enhance a form of global scrutiny making violent and despotic behaviour of states visible for the world (J.B. Thompson 1994, cited in Stevenson 2003: 107). In fact, the tensions between China and Tibet is not a new phenomena but the riots bring the issue back into the public what proves the statement of Simon Cottle, that the mass media is rather reporting about violent conflicts and has little interest in processes of peaceful resolutions of conflicts (Cottle 2006: 100). The conflict is carried out in the media via selective, framed communication and voices stating their opinion on the conflict are raised everywhere in the world.[...]

UN-mediated talks on the future of the territory, - Boeken zoeken: tibet Scopri International conflicts in a mediated world: News-making about the conflict between China and Tibet di Sylvia Stutzer: spedizione gratuita per i clienti International conflicts in a mediated world (ebook) Adobe News-making about the conflict between China and Tibet The recently escalated conflict between the Peoples Republic of China and its autonomous region of Tibet is perceptible everywhere in the world and not only a national issue as contemporary mass media enhance a form of global scrutiny making violent and Afghanistan profile - Timeline - BBC News - International conflicts in a mediated world - Essay from the year 2008 in the subject Communications News-making about the conflict between China and Tibet - Boeken zoeken: tibet Stutzer, Sylvia, International conflicts in a mediated world - News-making about the conflict between China and Tibet (meer info), GRIN Verlag, 2009 20pp ?International conflicts in a mediated world: News-making about the News & Ideas At the close of the year, the war in Syria is the worlds gravest, with its effects The resolution sets forth an ambitious timetable, with talks between the Tehran has not hesitated to make political hay of Houthi successes, which mediated the peace agreement, and international powers, 6 of the Worlds Most Worrisome Disputed Territories Stutzer, Sylvia, International conflicts in a mediated world - News-making about the conflict between China and Tibet (meer info), GRIN Verlag, 2009 20pp Stutzer, Sylvia, International conflicts in a mediated world - News-making about the conflict between China and Tibet (meer info), GRIN Verlag, 2009 20pp