

When Granddaddy Ralph died, Eddie Summer's family moved to the country and into the house with Granny Garner. As a small boy, Eddie could've had no better place to grow up than Chappells, South Carolina during the 60s and 70s. But it all ended far too soon. A mysterious disease struck him at the age of nineteen. It took his voice as well as all of his motor functions. He tried many doctors and many therapies, but nothing helped. A computer introduced to him in 1985 changed his life. By blinking his eyes, he could operate it, and it gave him a voice. After he'd lived as a quadriplegic for twenty years, he decided to use his computer and his writing talents to become part of the real world again. He convinced the owner of a local newspaper to let him write a column every other week. Seedlings is a compilation of his best newspaper columns. A seedling pecan tree stood at the edge of the field beside Eddie's grandmother's house. It grew to good size without bearing pecans. If a seedling pecan tree could bear fruit after years of barrenness, Eddie hopes his efforts might finally bear fruit.
